C4i Awarded contract for Sydney Ports Corporation's new surveillance system

C4i was recently awarded a contract by Sofrelog, providers of integrated Vessel Tracking Systems (VTS) for the turn key design, supply and commissioning of a Voice Communication System for Sydney Ports Corporation (SPC). C4i will provide VHF radios and antennas, a networked communications system, all controlled and accessed from operator positions at the new SPC command centre in Port Botany as well as satellite sites in Sydney Harbour.

C4i will complete this project in 2011. The offered system uses Voice over IP (VoIP) technology and includes capability to interface to legacy systems in both analog and digital domains. The system provides an integrated voice command and control management system for boating and shipping traffic in both Port Jackson and Botany Bay.

"This award follows the recent commissioning of a similar system for Townsville ports. The C4i SwitchplusIP™ product is ideally suited for the command and control applications with remote radio stations. Using our standard IP product, voice traffic can now easily be routed to radios anywhere within a network making the location of the command and control position versatile", said Peter Harrison, C4i Managing Director.

The Port Communications system is based on C4i SwitchplusIP™ product which is currently in use in numerous public safety applications, emergency response systems and defence applications around the world. The SwitchplusIP™ system provides the latest in IP based technologies and supports NSW government with future growth opportunities through this distributed IP based solution.
