

Minister of Defence awards Harris Systems Engineer for her Achievements

06-Jan-2016

Two of Harris's talented systems engineers, Ken Ang and Lucinda Teague, from the Melbourne Australia office were recently recognised by the Australian Defence Industry as finalists in the 2015 AIDN Young Achiever Awards. These awards are held annually and were created to encourage young upcoming talented engineers within the Australian Defence Industry. Lucinda went on to be announced as the winner of AIDN-VIC's Young Achiever Award which she received at the annual AIDN-VIC function, as recognition of the skills, experience and dedication she has brought to the Harris engineering team on multiple defence projects.

Lucinda received recognition for her interest and skills in the development of quality product to meet the Australian Defence customer's business, technical and end-user needs. Her contributions were enhanced by her time as a serving RAAF officer and by her First Class Honours Engineering degree.

"I was surprised to be nominated for the Young Achiever Award and felt honoured to then actually win at the state level. I'm thankful to Harris C4i for being given the opportunity to further my skills and feel I can really contribute to the defence industry. It's very exciting to work for an Australian company that delivers cutting edge technology to the defence community around the globe." Lucinda said during her speech, 2015 AIDN-VIC

Harris C4i is extremely proud of Lucinda who is also a recent participant in our Emerging Talent program. Staff development is very important to Harris C4i, with the company investing heavily in skills enhancement through training programs every year to ensure international competitiveness of their world leading VoIP technology. Lucinda will continue her fantastic work on upcoming projects and taking part in various organisations, including assisting in the development of standards through support and working groups including EUROCAE.
